Won Cheol for reviewing the second draft and correcting more Hangul goofs.

The source

The names in this article are all drawn from a compilation of Korean names in the Koryŏ period (A.D. 918-1392). There are 1440 individuals named, with related information for each one including the source(s).

I've focused on names with any date in the 13th or 14th century. That cut the number of names considered not quite in half. Further, I omitted names that appeared to have extra terms that I have not yet sorted out. That still leaves a substantial body of names. There's plenty more work that can be done with the data.

Each entry uses the personal name most commonly used, except for kings and queens, for which the posthumous name is used.

Dates may be birth, death, flourishing, reign years of kings, or period of religious life of a monk.

Alternate names include:

- earlier names
- taboo name for kings and queens
- manhood name
- pen name
- religious name
- posthumous name

I have not included any of these names, largely because I am not sure how they might have been used. Again, there are plenty of names to consider.

There may be a place name where the clan originated.

There may be the personal name of the father. These have been included in the corpus.

There may be a list of names of sons. These have been included in the corpus.

The highest office held is given, in Chinese characters only.

Hanja are given for all names. I have not included them, in large part because I don't read them. I have room in my data for the Hanja if I can suss them out.

The source is: Biographical Tables of the Koryŏ Period, compiled by Pow-Key Sohn. East Asia Studies; Institute of International Studies; University of California, Berkeley, California. September 1958.

I have learned that a scanned copy of this is available for viewing at <https://babel.hathitrust.org/cgi/pt?id=uva.x030806869&view=1up&seq=1>

Korean name structure

Korean names are generally composed of a clan or family name followed by one or two personal name elements. I am not going any deeper than this. I'll refer to this as Clan Name in the First Position Name in the Second Position. The name elements are typically a single syllable. Exceptions will not be in the lists here. Each syllable is a single Hangeul character block or a single Hanja (Chinese character).

There will be a list of clan names, and three lists of personal name elements, being all the Name in the First Positions, all the Name in the Second Positions, and all the combinations in the source.

In general, you can build a name by picking a Clan, a Name in the First Position, and optionally a Name in the Second Position. Choosing an attested combination would be more authentic, but to the best of my understanding, this approach will yield a perfectly registrable name. If you elect to put a name only found in the second position in this data in the first position, it may still be registrable.

The source used the McCune-Reischauer romanization scheme. I will also present the Revised Romanization form as well. There are other romanization schemes for Korean as well. I've also provided my best shot at the Hangul. In some cases, the correct Hangul derived from McCune-Reischauer is ambiguous, so there will be extra characters. I elected to present Hangul because that will help with pronunciation. The source gives Hanja from the sources. Trying to include that here is beyond my abilities at this time.

To hyphenate or not

A two syllable name can be separated with a hyphen, or not, in general. McCune-Reischauer calls for a hyphen if the syllable break is ambiguous. Revised Romanization is more flexible on that. Rendering them as two separate words is at least plausible.

Romanizing limitations

For SCA purposes, the name must be romanized using one scheme. Any one will do, but all the parts need to use the same one. In Korea, people romanize their names in diverse ways that are not consistent with either McCune-Reischauer or Revised Romanization. They have not been forced to change to align with Revised Romanization, but that does not get you a pass from picking an official one and using it consistently for registration purposes.

Gender

For all intents, I am completely ignorant of how one might assign a gender to a name. That said, I figure that the principal names are overwhelmingly men. Fathers and sons are obviously male. If you want a clearly female name, you'll have to consult other sources.

Romanization

I relied heavily on the Wikipedia pages for McCune-Reischauer Romanization and Revised Romanization. I commend them to your attention.

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/McCune-Reischauer>

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Revised_Romanization_of_Korean

When romanizing a multi-character name, the final consonant of the first character and the beginning consonant of the second character interact in ways that affect the romanization.

Both Wikipedia pages have a table that pretty clearly lays this out.

The tables

The tables are sorted by the Hangul, so they are in the typical Korean sort order.

Each table has the McCune-Reischauer (M-R) form from the source, the Revised Romanization (RR), and the Hangul. If there are multiple possible Hangul forms, both are given.
